This book is the revised version of my dissertation thesis, which was defended at the Università degli Studi in Florence in April 2015 and until now only accessible via the national libraries in Florence and Rome.

There are many people to whom I owe my appreciation and gratitude for having contributed, in one way or another, to this publication. First of all, I would like to thank my tutor at the University of Florence, Antonio Pinelli, for his interest in the research topic and for his valuable comments during the drafting of the text. My gratefulness goes also to my tutor Frank Zöllner of the Universität Leipzig, who encouraged me to undertake this research. Furthermore, I'm particularly indebted to the entire Dipartimento di Storia delle Arti e dello Spettacolo at the University of Florence, represented by Maria Grazia Messina and Sara Mamone, which provided me with a generous grant, allowing me to take advantage of Florence's rich cultural heritage. Another generous financial support of the University of Florence also gave me the opportunity to visit the Warburg Institute in London. Among the scholars whom I met at the Warburg I would like to mention Thomas Frangenberg, Sietske Fransen, Jennifer Sliwka, and François Quiviger. In addition to the open shelves with obscure literature from the 16th century, their thoughtful comments and joyful company were of great help.

An additional grant from the Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst (DAAD) enabled me to study at the Kunsthistorisches Institut in Florenz – Max-Planck-Institut and special thanks go to the directors of the institute, Alessandro Nova and Gerhard Wolf, for their friendly hospitality. At the Kunsthistorisches Institut I was fortunate not only to benefit from lively excursions in the surroundings of Florence but also to meet many scholars who were interested in my topic. Above all, I owe my gratitude to Marco Collareta, Wolf Dietrich Löhr, Jana Graul, Fabian Jonietz, and David Young Kim for their useful suggestions. Ermanna Panizon, Alberto Saviello, Mandy Richter, Valentina Frascarolo, Giampaolo Distefano, Laura Fenelli, Alessandra Malquori, Henrike Eibelshäuser, Marion Heisterberg, and Pavla Langer are also among the scholars and friends I met in Via Giuseppe Giusti. Both for your willingness to comment on my drafts and for your kind-hearted presence and moral support, I owe you so much. The team from arthi-toricum and Gunther Gebhard guided me thoughtfully through the publication process and made many useful suggestions; Kristina Mayberry took great care of the English manuscript and fixed the more embarrassing mistakes.

Finally, I would like to thank my parents Brigitte and Gerd, my sisters Franziska and Anna-Bigna, and, first and foremost, Beatrice most sincerely for their loving support. Without you, this work would not have been possible.
