

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book is a result of the doctoral research conducted at the University of Heidelberg during the period from January 2013 till April 2016. I am very grateful to the University, the Graduate Academy, and the Landesgraduierertenförderung (LGF) of Baden-Württemberg, whose funding permitted me to study in Germany and to write this book. During these three years, I was welcomed by the department of philosophy of Heidelberg University and by the section for Phenomenological Psychopathology and Psychotherapy at the University Clinic that provided an outstanding interdisciplinary environment.

One could not overestimate the importance of someone's place of work and of the people one works with. Most of all, I would like to thank my scientific supervisor, Professor Thomas Fuchs, who from the very start of this project has shown his support, provided valuable advice, and many precious comments. I have always felt inspired by his thinking and research. Moreover, his work on body memory acted as an important influence and inspiration for some of the ideas developed in this text.

Many thanks go to my second advisor, Professor Lanei Rodemeyer. I am very grateful for her precise and helpful comments on my text, for her kind attention and valuable advice. I consider myself fortunate to have attended her seminar on Husserl's Analyses concerning Passive Synthesis at Heidelberg University, which was very motivating for my work on this topic.

I am also very grateful to my current place of work, Center for Adaptive Rationality at the Max Planck Institute for Human Development in Berlin, all my colleagues there, and especially the director Professor Ralph Hertwig for supporting my interest in interdisciplinary research and development of my new projects.

Beyond words is my gratitude to my parents and family who have been as encouraging and kind as one could only hope. I would also like to thank my friends and colleagues from so many different countries whose friendship, ideas, and conversations contributed to both my work and life during the time of my doctoral studies: Daniel Pucciarelli, Zaida Olvera, Zeno Van Duppen, Michela Summa, Sonja Frohoff, Mike Finn, Joshua Connor, João Machado Vaz, Philipp Schmidt, Thiemo Breyer, Samuel Thoma, Laura Galbusera, Remy Rizzo, Allan Køster, Stefan Kristensen, Kriszta Sajber, Till Grohman, Leonor Irarrázaval, Monika

Dullstein, Rixta Fambach, Evelien Holvoet, André Mata, Danil Razeev, Maria Sekatskaya, Ksenia Kapelchuk, Daria Chirva, Sergei Levin, Natalia Artemenko, Vlad Orsher, Andrei Patkul, Georgy Chernavin, Kristin Gissberg, Nicolás Garrera, Inês Hipólito, Vera Pereira, Sofia Miguens, Rob Clowes, Dina Mendonça, Jorge Gonçalves, Alexander Gerner, Caio Novaes, and Vasco Correia.

With special affection and gratitude, I want to remember two people who are no longer with us but whose influence withstands the passage of time: Julia Orlova from Saint Petersburg University, who introduced me to phenomenological philosophy and who was one of the most inspiring, strong, and original personalities I happened to get to know; and Professor László Tengelyi, under whose supervision I was happy to study at the University of Wuppertal during my master's program. This book could not have happened without their influence and encouragement to pursue my studies and research in phenomenology.

Finally, I would like to thank the editors and collaborators at the Heidelberg University Publishing for their work that made possible this publication and Tessa Marzotto for her tremendous help with the proofreading of this manuscript.
