The book at hand is a revised version of my PhD thesis, submitted to the Johannes Gutenberg University of Mainz in April 2023. The doctoral viva took place on 21 November 2023.

To a degree that can hardly be overstated, this work is indebted to the sustained efforts of my PhD supervisor Apl. Prof. Dr. Annemarie Ambühl. Many ideas presented in this book were sparked by her knowledge about Graeco-Roman literature and culture, which is as deep as it is encyclopaedic. Over more than five years, she provided structured comments on every single draft paper, chapter or presentation I produced. Having talked to many PhD candidates from various fields, I know for a fact that her commitment went well beyond what I could have expected or hoped for!

I am grateful to Univ.-Prof. Dr. Christine Walde, a fellow Petronian enthusiast, who has also accompanied me on my doctoral journey all the way from the research proposal to the viva. I particularly benefitted from the vivid discussions in her research colloquium (Classical Philology at Mainz university) as well as from her invitation to the annual international PhD colloquium entitled “Editare, Commentare, Interpretare: approcci multiformi al testo letterario.” Christine never failed to give me rich food for thought on various literary and methodological questions.

I am equally grateful to Prof. Costas Panayotakis, who welcomed me at the University of Glasgow from January to March 2022. I treasure the memory of discussing Petronius over lunch many times, being amazed at how Costas casually establishes links between the Satyrica and the vast realm of ancient literature, no matter how distant or obscure. I am proud that, if only for a time, I was allowed to follow in Costas’ footsteps.

I shall not fail to mention Prof. Christiane Reitz and Prof. Marietta Horster, who set me on the right track in the early stages of my work on Petronius. Last but not least, I am grateful to the German Academic Scholarship Foundation (Studienstiftung des deutschen Volkes), which awarded me three years of funding for my PhD project, as well as to the team of Propylaeum-eBOOKS, who guided me through the publication process.
