

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This work was carried out at the CMS Archive in Marburg under the supervision of Ingo Pini. It would not have been realised were it not for the valuable assistance of the CMS staff and the free access to the archive provided to me during the long period of my stay there.

My warmest thanks are expressed to Ingo Pini for his guidance and support throughout the whole period of my research. He has always been open to the discussion of any subjects pertaining to my work and has offered his wide experience and valuable opinion freely. I am also particularly grateful to Walter Müller for his guidance, help, and readiness to devote his time to valuable discussions when asked. He has been supportive of my project from the start and has assisted not only at the level of research, but also practically by offering me the possibility to work at the CMS as a research assistant at a time when the future of my project was threatened by lack of funding. To both these scholars I am indebted for offering me free access to the CMS archive and its resources as well as for allowing me to reproduce a large amount of photographs which belong to the archive. Moreover, I am particularly thankful to them for agreeing to publish this work as part of the CMS series.

I am especially thankful to excavators, museums, and collectors who have granted me the permission to include unpublished material in my thesis, as well as to museums which have allowed me to handle the Minoan seals in their collections personally. The Heraklion Museum granted me the permission to handle 20 unpublished pieces under its courtesy, for which I am very grateful. My particular thanks are expressed to Nota Dimopoulou Rethemiotaki and Athanasia Kanta who dealt with my request to publish the relevant pieces. To the Heraklion Museum I am also thankful for allowing me to study and personally handle published Minoan seals kept there during a research visit in 2006. Apart from the then director Nota Dimopoulou-Rethemiotaki, I would also like to thank Vaso Marselou for her help during my work in the museum.

The Cabinet des Médailles of the Bibliothèque nationale de France gave me the permission to handle two unpublished prisms from its collection. Moreover, they allowed me to study the MM seals kept there during a visit in 2006. I am therefore indebted to the director of the department Michel Amandry and the curator Mathilde Avisseau Broustet.

The British Museum has kindly allowed the inclusion in my study of an unpublished piece kept there. It also granted me the permission to study the MM three-sided soft stone prisms of the museum during a research stay in 2006. I especially wish to express my thanks to Lesley Fitton of the Department of Greek and Roman Antiquities for her help, friendliness, and readiness to help during my stay in London.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The National Archaeological Museum in Athens has granted me permission to study the Minoan seals kept there during a visit at 2006. I wish to express my gratitude to the director of the museum Nikolaos Kaltsas and the head of the Department of Prehistory Lena Papazoglou for their processing of my request as well as to Eleni Kostantinidi for her help during my work at the museum.

The French Archaeological School of Athens and the Ashmolean Museum have permitted the inclusion in this work of unpublished three-sided prisms under their courtesy. I would like to thank Dominique Mulliez of the former and Ioannis Galanakis of the latter for dealing with my requests to handle this material. The excavators Philip Betancourt, Costis Davaras, Olivier Pelon, Jean-Claude Poursat, Despoina Chatzi Vallianou, Antonis Vasilakis, and Maia Pomadère have kindly allowed the discussion in my thesis of unpublished pieces. To them I would like to express my gratitude. I am particularly indebted to Jean-Claude Poursat for his readiness to help with regard to any kind of request related to the material which he excavated. I also wish to thank Jonathan Rosen for granting me the permission to include in my study two unpublished prisms in his possession. Finally, I am indebted to Artemis Karnava for her very speedy response to my request for a copy of her unpublished PhD thesis and her readiness to answer any questions.

Marian Feldman, Don Evely, Pascal Darcque, and Ashley Cooke kindly provided information related to the inventory numbers, keeping places, and courtesy rights of various seals. Diamantis Panagiotopoulos helped me to secure funding for the publication.

The realisation of this work would not have been possible were it not for the financial support of various institutions and individuals. The Greek State Scholarships Foundation IKY provided me with a three year PhD scholarship. At the end of this period, the Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur Mainz hired me as a research assistant, so offering me the possibility not only to support my studies financially, but also to gain work experience at the CMS. The Graduate Centre for the Humanities and Social Sciences of the Philipps-Universität Marburg provided me with a short term research assistantship which was funded by the STIBET program of the DAAD and partly financed the last months of my project. The Graduate Centre for the Humanities and Social Sciences of the Philipps-Universität Marburg has also funded research trips on two separate occasions. To all these institutions I would like to express my gratitude.

For publication of the book I am indebted to the Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur Mainz which covered the greater part of the costs. Apart from that, I am also grateful to the Institute for Aegean Prehistory in Philadelphia, the Universitätsstiftung of the Philipps-Universität Marburg, the Wilhelm Hahn und Erben-Stiftung in Bad Homburg, and the Institute of Classical Studies in London for providing significant financial support for the publication.

I am also thankful to various individuals, mostly family or friends, who have provided financial and ethical support when needed. I express my deepest thanks to my mother Anna Kontodima Anastasiadou, Vasilis Popotas, Mikela Sourmeli Alexandridi (†), and Ioli Alexandridi. My mother I want to particularly thank for always being open to offer whatever kind of help would be needed. To Aggeliki Theodoropoulou I am grateful for offering me hospitality in Paris during my research visit at the city. To Andrew Kerrigan I am particularly thankful for some critical remarks on the text and, more importantly, for his proofreading of the complete text which he carried out in good time. Moreover, I am grateful to him for his support throughout the duration of the project. I am also thankful to Susanne Iglar and Nadine Chmura who have offered their valuable support during the last months of the realisation of this project. Nadine Chmura in particular has been especially supportive during the preparation of the manuscript for publication.

Olga Krzyszkowska has provided me with photographs and impressions of an unpublished three-sided prism. She also proofread part of the text and provided valuable comments. Moreover, she secured funding which partly enabled me to work on publication of the thesis. For these reasons, but more importantly for having made herself continuously available as an archaeologist and a friend throughout the duration of this study, I am deeply grateful.

My second examiner Andreas Müller-Karpe I would like to thank for accepting this role and for always being open to provide any kind of help. I am also grateful to him for giving me the opportunity to present part of my work to other students of the Philipps-Universität Marburg, and not least for providing his support for the publication of this work.

Wolfgang Reich, Giannis Nikolaidis, Christian Schröder, Matthias Nolte, and Ralph Ewerth have all provided valuable help with IT issues. Matthias Nolte in particular was responsible for designing the layout of the book, for which I am particularly grateful.

Lastly, I am also thankful to the deanship of the Faculty of History and Cultural Sciences of the Philipps-Universität Marburg for accepting my request to write this work in English.
