About the Author

Georgios Doudalis completed undergraduate studies at the University of Crete and a Master's degree in Aegean Archaeology in the Department of Archaeology at the University of Sheffield. He completed his doctoral dissertation at the Institute of Classical Archaeology at the University of Heidelberg in 2019 with support of the 2016 award of the Seager Fellowship at the Institute for Aegean Prehistory. Doudalis was a Visiting Lecturer in the Department of Classics at University of North Carolina, Greensboro, in 2020-2021. In 2022 he will work as a Kress Fellow at the American School of Classical Studies at Athens. Doudalis has participated in many archaeological projects in Greece, in particular at the site of Mochlos, whose ceramics are covered in this dissertation. At Mochlos, he serves as Manager of Operations, Research Associate, Ceramics Specialist, and he is currently excavating the Protopalatial remains at the site.
